Giants' Pierre-Paul hurt in fireworks accident

NFL. Giants star defensive lineman Jason Pierre-Paul nearly blew off his hands in South Florida this past weekend.

Star New York Giants defensive end Jason Pierre-Paul injured his hand in a Fourth of July fireworks display gone horribly wrong this past weekend near Miami, according to multiple reports Sunday.

Andy Slater of WINZ-Miami tweeted around 4:15 p.m. Eastern on Sunday: "Big Jason Pierre-Paul story about to break in S. Fla. He severely injured hand in fireworks accident. @Coach_Eisy first to hint at situation."

@Coach_Eisy later tweeted out about the situation, "So for the #Giants fans curious about JPP, I was told that amputation COULD [be] an option but not confirmed."

Reports, however, indicated Sunday night that Pierre-Paul's injuries were not career threatening. TMZ Sports wrote Sunday afternoon that Pierre-Paul's fingers and thumb were injured specifically.

Defensive linemen in the NFL constantly rely on their hands during games as they jab and grab at offensive linemen while in pursuit of ball carriers. Pierre-Paul is arguably the top defensive player on the Giants.

The Giants and Pierre-Paul have been involved in something of a contract dispute for the better part of this NFL offseason. New York placed its franchise tag on Pierre-Paul in March, but he hasn't yet signed the $14.8 million tender. Obviously, this off-the-field injury could cost Pierre-Paul millions.

"I think I am worth a lot of money," Pierre-Paul told ESPN late last season. "I don't know what my future holds. Who knows if I am going to be in a Giants uniform; who knows where I am going to be in the offseason. Like I said, now, the numbers are there. I had a great season, and everybody sees it. There really is nothing else to say, just negotiations and it is coming."

Pierre-Paul missed several key OTA dates this spring.

"From what I've seen on film, [Pierre-Paul] still looks pretty elite to me … but not being here, he's also going to be behind because there is a lot we are doing right now," new Giants defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo said. "Terminology is big in this league on both sides of the ball. Hopefully he is up to that challenge [when he returns] and we can get up to speed real quick."

The former South Florida star was selected by the Giants with the 15th overall pick in the 2010 NFL Draft, and his impact on the New York defense was almost immediate.

Pierre-Paul, nicknamed "JPP," won a Super Bowl with the Giants in 2011 and is a two-time Pro Bowl selection. He had one of his most productive seasons with Big Blue in 2014, registering 12.5 sacks and forcing three fumbles.

According to Forbes, more than 10,000 Americans were injured by fireworks last year and more than 200 people go to U.S. hospital emergency rooms with fireworks-related injuries around the Fourth of July holiday.

Fatal. Man plunges to death from balcony

A 28-year-old man dropped to his death from a sixth-floor balcony of a luxury high-rise on the Lower East Side early Sunday, police said.

The victim, who was partying with friends, was sitting on the balcony's railing at 38 Delancey St. around 2:30 a.m. when he tipped backwards and plunged to a fourth-floor terrace.

The man, whose name was not released pending family notification, was declared dead at the scene.

A neighbor told the Daily News he heard a crashing noise, but thought it was part of the Fourth of July celebrations.

"There were so many fireworks," Hal Friedman told the paper. "I assumed it was fireworks."

Cop car set on fire with illegal fireworks

An NYPD patrol car was set afire when lit fireworks were tossed inside in Brooklyn on Sunday, police said.

The car was unoccupied, and no officers were injured.

Police were dispersing a crowd who had clustered at Carlton Avenue near Lafayette Avenue in Fort Greene around 2:30 a.m. when someone tossed a lit firework into the open window of the cruiser, according to the New York Post. Cops used a fire extinguisher to douse the blaze, the paper reported.

A department spokesman said cops had yet to make an arrest for the fire, but five people at the scene were arrested for unlawful assembly and disorderly conduct. METRO

Internet bites back at Whole Foods

Gulp. Social media backlash at upscale chain's apology, which some found hard to swallow.

The snarkfest on social media has been in overdrive since the big bosses at Whole Foods came clean about a shocking price sticker scandal and vowed to fix it.

"Straight up, we made some mistakes," said co-CEO Walter Robb in a YouTube video with co-CEO John Mackey at his side. "We want to own that."

"Any errors were unintentional, and any claim that we are 'systematically overcharging' customers is completely inaccurate," the pair said in an additional online posting.

Wednesday's apology did little to tamp down the outrage, but some were willing to cut the chain some slack over New York City's allegations that prepackaged food products are often wrongly marked with higher weights and prices.

Many of the comments say that the only thing Whole Foods is really sorry about is getting caught. Again.

It doesn't help that California inspectors found the same shenanigans going on in the store's West Coast outlets and fined the Texas food giant $800,000.

"Seems a bit suspicious when you get caught twice," said Twitter user Alexandra Smith (@ashinsmith).

Cheryl Hill, on Facebook, lashed out at the company's insistence that the overpricing was not routine.

Quoted

"Just FYI, customers aren't 'concerned' about the pricing inaccuracies that overcharged us. We're angry about them."
Cheryl Hill

"Just FYI, customers aren't 'concerned' about the pricing inaccuracies that overcharged us. We're angry about them," she said.

More than anything, Whole Foods shoppers said they expected better, especially since a lot of what the store sells comes at premium prices.

In a check of 80 items in one undercover operation last fall, the city's Department of Consumer Affairs found every item mislabeled.

Whole Foods Market has eight locations in Manhattan and one in Brooklyn.

At least 14 hospitalized after deck collapses in North Carolina

A deck on a house on the North Carolina coast collapsed on Saturday as a family gathered for a photo, and at least 14 people were rushed to the hospital, including several in critical condition, officials said.

The wooden deck at the house overlooking the ocean in Emerald Isle was one story high, officials said.

The injured were transported to hospitals from the scene, which is about 60 miles northeast of Wilmington, police said. Three or four people were in critical condition, said Emerald Isle Fire Chief Bill Walker.

Walker said others with lesser injuries might not have been brought to hospitals. No details were available on the injured.

Authorities said a family had gathered on the deck to be photographed when it gave way. The cause of the collapse is under investigation, police said.

A nurse at Carteret General Hospital said the facility received 18 patients from the collapse and transferred two patients in critical condition to other hospitals.

One patient in critical condition was airlifted from the scene to New Hanover Regional Medical Center in Wilmington, southwest of Emerald Isle, said a nurse in charge at that facility. REUTERS

Greeks vote 'no' in bailout referendum

People celebrate in Athens after the first exit polls. / GETTY IMAGES

Volatility. The eurozone could be losing its first member with the risk of more unraveling to come.

Greeks voted overwhelmingly to reject terms of a bailout, risking financial ruin in a show of defiance that could splinter Europe.

The astonishingly strong victory by the 'no' camp overturned opinion polls that had predicted an outcome too close to call. It leaves Greece in uncharted waters: risking financial and political isolation within the eurozone and a banking collapse if creditors refuse further aid.

But for millions of Greeks, the outcome was an angry message to creditors that Greece can no longer accept repeated rounds of austerity that, in five years, have left one in four without a job. Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras has denounced the price paid for aid as "blackmail" and a national "humiliation."

Hundreds of Greeks began pouring into the central Syntagma Square in front of Parliament to celebrate, after a week of building desperation as banks were shut and cash withdrawals rationed to prevent a collapse of the Greek financial system.

Officials from the Greek government, which had argued that a 'no' vote would strengthen its hand to secure a better deal from international creditors after months of wrangling, immediately said they would try to restart talks with European partners.

Eurozone officials shot down any prospect of a quick resumption of talks. One official said there were no plans for an emergency meeting of eurozone finance ministers on Monday, adding the vote outcome meant the ministers "would not know what to discuss."

Many of Athens' partners have warned over the past week that a 'no' vote would mean cutting bridges with Europe and driving Greece's crippled financial system into outright bankruptcy, dramatically worsening the country's economic depression.

Greek banks are expected to run out of money within days unless the European Central Bank provides an emergency lifeline. Finance Minister Yanis Varoufakis was due to meet top Greek bankers later on Sunday, and State Minister Nikos Pappas, one of Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras' closest aides, said it was "absolutely necessary" to restore liquidity to the banking system now that the vote is over.

However, the European Central Bank, which holds a conference call on Monday, may be reluctant to increase emergency lending to Greek banks after voters rejected the spending cuts and economic reforms, which creditors consider essential to make Greek public finances viable, central bankers said. The Foreman forecast

TOM FOREMAN

TOM FOREMAN PREDICTS THIS WEEK IN POLITICS. HE IS A CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY: A DAD, A DAUGHTER, AND A RIDICULOUS PLAN."

BLOCKBUSTER TIME

Hollywood made its mid-summer run at the box office, and now the dash for the ballot box is cutting loose. After they took a deep breath over the Fourth, politicos will now give up all pretense of it being "too early" to talk about 2016. So lights, camera, "act like you mean it" — here are three things to watch for this week in politics.

1. TERMINATOR FOUR: Considering his Republican roots, you might expect Arnold Schwarzenegger to hop out of his latest film to terminate Hillary Clinton's presidential hopes. Instead, fellow Democrat Bernie Sanders is lighting up lefties in a way she has not, and his rally in front of 10,000 screaming fans made him look like a front-runner. The polls and most political analysts still give the man from Vermont little chance of beating her in the primary, but watch for Clinton to start hitting back harder this week in hopes of knocking down some of the enthusiasm. Cue it, Clinton: "I'll be back."

2. INSIDE OUT (AND UPSIDE DOWN): President Obama went into the holiday selling the latest jobs report as nothing but good news with a record 64 straight months of growth and the lowest unemployment rate in seven years. But some economists say stagnant wages and people dropping out of the job market remain real issues. Toss in some Wall Street worries and the Greek crisis, and you can expect a rising tide of politicos grumbling this week about the age-old campaign issue: "the economy, stupid."

3. TRUMPTASTIC WORLD: Imagine a future time when a mosquito is found sealed in amber after biting Donald Trump, and — oh, never mind — Republicans don't have to imagine it. Trumpasaurus rex is already shaking the entire GOP election field. It's not that any of the other contenders think he is going to win the nomination, but when he roars, everyone is watching to see how they'll react. You can bet mainstream operatives will be trying even harder this week to get the GOP power grid running again to contain him.

Boat explosion in Maryland marina injures 10 people

Ten people, including three children, were injured when a boat refueling at a Chesapeake Bay marina in Maryland exploded in flames on Saturday night, authorities said on Sunday.

The injured were rushed to local hospitals, including five who were taken to MedStar Washington Hospital Center's burn unit in Washington, D.C.

The 38-foot cabin cruiser was refueling at a Solomons Island marina, about 75 miles southeast of Washington, when an unknown source ignited the vessel and caused a flash fire, according to the Solomons Volunteer Fire and Rescue Department.

A dock attendant had noticed a gas sheen around the boat and a strong smell of fuel, a Department of Natural Resources police spokeswoman said.

The explosion occurred when the boat owner, a 36-year-old man from Solomons, opened the engine compartment hatch, authorities said.

The cause of the blast is under investigation.

None of the injuries appeared to be life threatening, according to the Solomons Volunteer Fire and Rescue Department.

Four things to know

1 Captured New York fugitive moved to prison from hospital

Captured prison escapee David Sweat was released on Sunday from a New York hospital where he had been treated for gunshot wounds and moved to a prison more than 250 miles from the one he fled, authorities said.

Sweat, captured last Sunday following a three-week manhunt, will be locked up alone in a cell for 23 hours a day and placed on suicide watch at Five Points Correctional Facility in Romulus, in the state's Finger Lakes region, the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision said.

Sweat, who was shot twice in the torso by a state police trooper during his capture near the Canadian border, was released from Albany Medical Center at about 3 a.m., the DOCCS said. The agency did not disclose details of his transport to prison.

Sweat /NY STATE POLICE

After a medical evaluation, Sweat will be held in special housing in a cell equipped with a bed, writing platform, toilet, sink and shower, prison authorities said. Opened in 2000, Five Points houses 1,294 inmates.

Sweat will be charged with first-degree escape, authorities have said. He is already serving life without parole for the murder of a Broome County sheriff's deputy. REUTERS

2 Leaping sturgeon kills 5-year-old in Florida

A leaping sturgeon struck and killed a 5-year-old girl boating with her family on a river in Florida, and a similar incident injured two adults in a different part of the state, wildlife officials said.

Jaylon Rippy was boating with her family on the Suwannee River in northwest Florida near Fanning Springs on Thursday evening when the jumping fish injured the young girl along with her mother and her 9-year-old brother, the state Fish and Wildlife Commission said in a statement. REUTERS

3 Maine man dies after trying to light firework on his head

A Maine man died during a Fourth of July celebration on Saturday night when he tried to launch a firework from the top of his head and it exploded, killing him instantly, police said Sunday.

Devon Staples, 22, of Calais, Maine, was drinking and celebrating the holiday in a friend's backyard when he placed the firework's mortar tube on his head around 10 p.m., said Stephen McCausland, a spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety. REUTERS

4 Two dead, three missing in Louisville boat accident

Two people were killed and three were missing after a boat crashed into a bridge in downtown Louisville Saturday night.

The accident occurred around 9:30 p.m. as the city was preparing for a holiday fireworks celebration at Waterfront Park. The boat, which contained nine people, turned over after it hit the Second Street Bridge in the Ohio River, Louisville Fire Chief Greg Frederick told WDRB-TV.

Four people, including three children, were taken to area hospitals for treatment. No details were available on the dead or missing. REUTERS

Fourth on the 4th. Billy Joel, 66, weds Alexis Roderick, 33, in NY

Billy Joel and Alexis Roderick / INSTAGRAM

Billy Joel chose the Fourth of July to say "I do" to wife No. 4 in a supersecret ceremony at his Long Island estate.

Joel and Alexis Roderick, who at 33 is half his age, exchanged vows in front of New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo, a close friend of the Piano Man.

The couple have been dating since 2009 and in April revealed that she is expecting later this summer.

This will be the first child for Roderick, who is an analyst at Morgan Stanley, and the 66-year-old Joel's second. He and actress/model Christie Brinkley are the parents of 29-year-old songbird Alexa Ray Joel.

The ever-gracious Brinkley, 62, remains close friends with Joel.

On Instagram, she wrote: "Congratulation to the glowing bride and groom. And to my daughter Alexa, who has a wonderful friend in Alexis! Wishing the growing family every happiness!"

How Matt Damon can ruin your marriage

Bros before ... oh, you get it. / GETTY IMAGES

When Ben Affleck was starting to feel the stress of his failing marriage, he turned to best pal Matt Damon — which apparently only made things worse, according to Radar Online. Affleck reportedly sought counsel from Damon and their agent, Patrick Whitesell, as times got tougher, which only upset soon-to-be ex-wife Jennifer Garner even more. "She knew he was talking to his agent and Matt about their marriage, and she started to feel like she was being ganged up on by the boys," a source says. "She felt left out and alone, so she started to control things. It got nasty. She started making thinly veiled threats" to make Affleck "look bad." Who knew Damon could have that effect on a woman?

Pixar's next seven movies

@COLLEGEHUMOR/YOUTUBE

Is it just me, or has Pixar been getting a little too good at making audiences — especially the grown-up contingent — bawl their eyes out at the drop of a hat? College Humor has put together this delightful look ahead at the animation titan's upcoming slate after "Inside Out" was such a hankie-dampening success. Take "Toy Story 4," for instance: "Two hundred years after a virus wipes out all of humanity, the toys must band together once more to help Buzz find the Earth's last pack of working batteries." Sounds fun! And then it's just two years until "Finding Chemo." Can't wait.

Kevin Hart planning a tiny wedding

KEEP IT SIMPLE.

Tiny comedy titan Kevin Hart might have gotten fiancee Eniko Parrish a giant engagement ring, but don't expect a giant wedding to go with it. Hart insists they're keeping things modest. "Small, small and small, definitely," he tells E! News of their plans for the nuptials. "It's definitely about us not making a big masquerade. It's not my style or cup of tea. It will be something special, just a day to be remembered just for us." Of course, that's all theoretical since Parrish is doing the planning without him. "I don't like to talk about it because I don't know details," he admits. "What I do say is, 'Honey, you have an amount. Don't go above the amount. Come to me when it's time to sign the check. It's your day to be happy.' That's what I've learned. You throw your hands up." Sounds like a plan.

Diddy dodging felony charges

Some good news for over-involved dad Sean "Diddy" Combs. The L.A. County DA's office has decided not to press charges against him over his alleged attempted assault with a kettlebell during an argument with a UCLA football coach, according to NBC News. Of course, the Los Angeles City Attorney's office could still hit him with misdemeanor charges, but that seems unlikely. So it looks like the only real fallout from this incident will be son Justin Dior Combs' mortification over everyone knowing how much his dad butts in on his football practices. Sorry, kid.

NOT SUCH A BAD BOY AFTER ALL.

Jai Courtney welcomes our robot overlords

Jai Courtney runs for his (half-naked) life in "Terminator Genisys." / PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Film. The "Terminator Genisys" star is totally down with artificial intelligence — and doing nude scenes.

With "Terminator Genisys," Jai Courtney steps into a franchise universe full of humans hopping through time to avert the rise of Skynet, artificial intelligence that goes online and promptly tries to destroy humanity. But is AI really going to be such a bad thing?

Most depictions of the singularity assume that it's going to be bad. What if things actually work out?
I'm sure there will be a grace period where it is great. I don't know that we're going to have a robot apocalypse, but I do like the fact that the threat is closer now. But yeah, man, I welcome artificial intelligence. Hey dude, if I could talk to a guy in this room that was made completely artificially, and he had a thinking brain, I'd want to have that conversation. I want to see that happen in my lifetime, for sure.

If there were to be a robot apocalypse, how would you fare?
I reckon I'd be good for a bit, and then when times got really tough, I'd probably be f—ed. I'm an actor, first and foremost. I could probably fool my way through a little bit of survival, but when boys have to become men, I think someone would get the better of me. I don't think it would be too long before we reached a point where my skills would be deemed worthless.

COURTNEY GETTY IMAGES

Doing a movie with this much time travel, how do you wrap your head around it? Did they give you a map?
They didn't give us a map. That would've been very helpful. You ask the smart people around you that wrote the thing and are driving it creatively, "What the hell's going on?" [Laughs] Those sorts of concepts are hard off the page for a person like me. Reading how that works doesn't make as much sense without the visual storytelling. So yeah, I definitely found it confusing at first.

"Terminator" movies involve time traveling while naked, and your character gets to do it in front of a room full of people. Were you worried about that part?
They're the least things you worry about when something like this comes along. I wasn't worried at all. You know it's going to be a bit of a challenge, and that's fine, and there's going to be some sensitivity around it. But it wasn't the first time. I hope I don't have to keep this trend, but my very first job, I had my clothes off in. I've done other shows where it's been demanded of me. So, you know, s— happens.

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

One more thing

In planning a modern acting career, how much do you factor in the time commitment of doing a franchise?
I'm all good for franchises now, I think. "Divergent" has moved on, which is good. I don't think I got glued into that too heavily, and I'm out of there now. With "Suicide Squad" happening, I'd be lying if I said that hadn't crossed my mind with perhaps what the next two years hold. It would be nice to take some time off a little bit. I don't know if I'll be afforded that luxury. You want time to digest the project you've worked on and prep for the next. The top of this year, I had two months to prep for "Suicide Squad." It was such a luxury. There is a danger in going back to back to back. You can burn yourself out.

HOW TO TREAT COSPLAYERS AT COMIC CONS

These cosplayers, seen at the Wizard World Comic Con in Cleveland, worked hard on their "Guardians of the Galaxy" costumes. Don't tamper with them, or else. / GETTY IMAGES

The San Diego Comic-Con is just around the corner (July 9 through 12). There will be previews of films and TV shows, and there will be vendors. There will also be, perhaps most of all, amazing costumes.

Cosplay has become increasingly popular over the years. Cosplayers often spend months and months getting ready. They also often face harassment at cons. Just because someone is dressed up doesn't mean they want your grubby paws on them. They don't expect to be verbally abused.

Here is my advice if you're going to SDCC this year (or any con with cosplayers).

1 Cosplayers aren't there as props. If you want a picture of them or with them, ask. Politely. Be respectful.

2 Don't touch their costumes unless you ask first and receive permission. Some of these pieces are delicate, and weeks and months of work often go into them.

3 Do ask about the work that went into it if they have time to chat with you.

4 Don't make them hold your kids. Silly as it sounds, people shove little guys into the arms of cosplayers all the time. Ask them to pose with the kids.

5 If you're going to post the picture somewhere, tell them. People love to see their work getting noticed.

6 Don't assume because someone is wearing a skin-baring costume, they want to be touched or hit on. Keep your hands and your comments to yourself.

7 If you ask for a picture, and they say no, let them be. I've watched cosplaying friends who were heading to pick up their children called a "bitch" or worse for not stopping to take a picture.

Happy con!

How to avoid the postgraduation blues

jobs & education

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Three tips for getting your life on track after college.

VANIA ANDRE
MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Graduation is the end of one journey and the beginning of another. However, if you're one of the many graduates who find themselves in a postcollege "quarter-life" crisis, fear not. We asked Lindsey Pollak, millennial workplace expert and author of "Becoming the Boss: New Rules for the Next Generation of Leaders," for her expert tips on how to avoid sinking into depression after school.

Don't get down on yourself

First, think about what you've just achieved. Graduation is a major accomplishment — one that should be celebrated. Second, remember that it is normal and understandable to compare your postgrad situation to that of your peers, which is why it's important to seek out colleagues who can not only offer encouragement but also empathy.

"Find friends in similar situations and connect with them regularly," says Pollak. Together, you can complain but also "encourage each other and serve as accountability partners and sounding boards."

Use downtime wisely

Use all those extra hours at your disposal as an opportunity to network and join local chapters of professional associations. Not only will you be working on advancing your career, but you will also be having fun doing it. Professional organizations typically host networking mixers where like-minded people can connect and share their resources.

Pollak suggests reaching out to your alma mater's career center and alumni groups.

"The career center can be a key contact because it spends time every single day building relationships with local, national and international employers in fields across the board," she says. "Set up a one-on-one appointment to review your résumé, take a career assessment test and practice a mock interview."

Alumni, on the other hand, have experience in the local market, she says. "They are often more than happy to help a young alum of their alma mater."

If you're currently employed...

"Figure out exactly what you would like to change about your job and what benefits you would like your next job to offer," says Pollak. "If you're looking for your first job, look beyond your paycheck — consider benefits as part of your total compensation."

Stay active

It can be easy to fall into a slump when you're unemployed. Fight the urge to sloth your day away by taking small steps toward big goals.

"Break up a big task into small action items," she says. "Convince yourself to send a single networking email, revise one bullet point on your résumé or apply to one job on LinkedIn each day. Often, once you do one small task, you will keep the momentum going and do a lot more."

Think about what direction you want your life to go in. Ask yourself what type of company you would like to work for. Or, if furthering your education is an option, what type of program would be right?

"It can be motivating to determine what benefits make your dream job your dream job," Pollak says.

Unemployment hits everyone hard. But it can be particularly unsettling for recent grads, because they're in a time of their lives when they're forging a path as an adult. The feelings of inadequacy and lack of confidence are ones that should be used to motivate instead of discourage.

The five best rooftop offices in Co-working spaces are moving outdoors — is this the best trend ever?

RAQUEL LANERI
RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

This summer, we're spending as much time doing as many activities as possible on rooftops. Rooftop drinking. Rooftop movie-watching. Even — rooftop working?

That's right. You can now hold your startup's brainstorming sessions — or write your long-gestating screenplay or just work "from home" — while getting sun on top of a midtown high-rise.

Indeed, quite a few co-working spaces are opening up sky-high outdoor "offices" for us vitamin D-deprived city-dwellers. It's not a bad idea: Numerous studies have shown that natural light and greenery help boost productivity. And, with amenities such as free Wi-Fi, coffee and access to printers and fax machines (which some companies still actually use), it sure beats working at Starbucks.

"Working from an outdoor office can give you a jolt of creative energy," says Mark Gilbreath, founder of LiquidSpace, an online marketplace that connects freelancers, startups and independent contractors with places to do their work. "With so many flexible workspaces available by the hour, day or longer, there's no reason to be stuck in a soul-sucking cube all day."

We asked LiquidSpace to highlight five of the best outdoor NYC offices available on its site. Book one for your next out-of-office meeting or working-from-home, sick-but-not-really day (we won't tell).

If you're over the age of 60, you're at risk for having or developing Peripheral Arterial Disease (PAD), which if left untreated can lead to severe pain, numbness, impotence, non-healing sores...even amputation. And if you're a smoker, have diabetes or have had a heart attack or stroke your risks are increased significantly.
The good news is that PAD can be easily treated with our fast, minimally invasive technique.

Do You Have PAD?

- ☑ Pain, achiness, fatigue or burning in the muscles of your feet, calves or thighs, especially during walking or exercise
- ☑ Increased pain when walking uphill, walking faster or for longer distances
- ☑ Pain subsides after several minutes of rest
- ☑ Pain level increasing with less exercise
- ☑ Numbness in legs and feet while at rest
- ☑ Paleness or discoloration
- ☑ Legs are cool to the touch
- ☑ Severe constant pain even at rest, presence of non-healing ulcers and risk of losing affected leg

Matz, Mets impress

The Mets completed one of their more impressive series of the 2015 season this past weekend in Los Angeles, taking two of three from the Dodgers. New York starter Steven Matz was brilliant Sunday, allowing just two hits over six scoreless innings in an 8-0 Mets win. Wilmer Flores went 4-for-5 for the New Yorkers. The Mets are now 42-41 on the season.

WORLD'S GREATEST

World Cup. The American women beat Japan, 5-2, last night to again capture the World Cup crown.

U.S. women's soccer star Alex Morgan wipes away tears of joy last night in Vancouver. / GETTY IMAGES

The United States women's soccer team not only exorcised some major demons Sunday in Vancouver, they also cemented themselves as the unquestioned "best in the world." For the first time since 1999, the American women are World Cup champions, courtesy of a 5-2 drubbing of Japan in the highest scoring Women's World Cup championship game in history.

There were only a few moments of uneasiness for U.S. fans in the clincher. When the ball deflected off the back of the head of American Julie Johnston for an own goal in the 52nd minute, there were haunting thoughts of the 2011 championship game that was won by the Japanese in penalty kicks. The score suddenly sat at 4-2 after a flurry of first-half action. But when Morgan Brian found a wide open Tobin Heath in front of the net, and Heath buried one past Japan netminder Ayumi Kaihori, the U.S. could rest easy.

Champs again

The U.S. women's soccer team has now won more World Cups than any other country with three.

- The U.S. women also won in 1991 and 1999. Germany has won the tournament twice.

The Americans' start to Sunday's championship game was otherworldly. It was as if the angered players from the title game in Germany four years ago suddenly showed up in Canada, hell-bent on revenge.

Carli Lloyd scored three minutes in. Lloyd again got one to trickle into the right corner of the net two minutes later. Lauren Holiday netted the third U.S. goal at the 14-minute mark, and Lloyd secured a hat trick just 16 minutes into the final. Lloyd got her team the 4-0 advantage thanks to an all-time shot, firing one from nearly midfield as she saw Ayumi Kaihori out of position. The ball floated over Kaihori's head as she stumbled and the pro-U.S. crowd in Canada flipped.

The U.S. held a 4-1 lead at halftime. The Americans took nine shots in the first half, and Japan took just three. The U.S. also had three corner kicks in the first half.

NBA

Knicks still looking for more bruisers

This summer's whirlwind NBA free-agency period was a hit for some teams, like the San Antonio Spurs, and a miss for others, like the Los Angeles Lakers. The Knicks, however, fell right in the middle of that spectrum, as they decided to go an alternate route and acquire B-level players.

This past week was either a minor success or complete failure for the franchise, depending on whichever Knicks fan is asked. But for Knicks boss Phil Jackson, he must feel as if he's built a roster the best way he could, considering no real stars even contemplated playing in New York.

Jackson entered the free-agency frenzy equipped with roughly $30 million in cap space. That has been all but used up, as he now has just a $2.8 million exception to use — likely to split between hopeful returnees Lance Thomas and Lou Amundson. Free agents Jason Smith and Alexey Shved are also willing to return to the team — for the right price. New York could also use that exception on either of the well-traveled veterans that they're in the midst of talking to — Caron Butler and Willie Green. Either of the two would fill a need as they're both tough-guy veterans who are good locker room guys, and they can score.

Jackson is looking for tough, hard-hat guys who know their roles, and will acquiesce to Carmelo Anthony hoarding most of the shots. It's a formula that helped the 76ers reach the 2001 NBA Finals when Allen Iverson was surrounded by a bunch of lunch-pail players who played their roles to perfection. It was a collection of unselfish characters that played tough defense and did whatever they had to do to get their leader free on offense.

Jackson's beloved triangle offense isn't exactly built that way, but the way his roster is forming, he may have to allow head coach Derek Fisher to adjust the system some when needed.

Outside of perhaps Langston Galloway, who averaged about 12 points per game last season, the Knicks do not feature a returning player who can score when asked. Perhaps Arron Afflalo, who was signed away from Portland, can help Anthony. Or maybe their No. 4 overall pick, Kristaps Porzingis, will actually be the offensive threat that Jackson believes he can be.

Caron Butler.
GETTY IMAGES

The other weekend signees, center Robin Lopez, center/forward Kyle O'Quinn, and forward Derrick Williams, are high-energy, effort guys who are accustomed to getting their points the "garbage" way — gathering loose balls and scoring on putbacks. There will be no plays called for any of them.

The lesson that Jackson learned is that no real stars — or budding stars like Tobias Harris and Greg Monroe — will ever seriously consider the Knicks as a destination until they prove they can win over the long haul.
